Course Description

This course investigates the question of government performance by examining the intersection of people, organizational structure and politics. How is the public will translated into public policy by the individuals who make up government? How do choices in organizational structure affect the implementation of policy? Why is government failure (of people, policies or organizations) hard to predict, and sometimes harder to fix? Using readings, policy exercises and case studies, the class will critically analyze the question of why some government policies and programs work, while others do not. While this class serves as an introduction to theories of public policy, bureaucracy and organization, the focus of the class is on understanding the exercise of public power and the policy outcomes that are produced.

Class Participation

An overview of the readings for the week will be covered at the beginning of each class. The rest of the class time will focus on answering the questions for the week, as well as the broader questions and themes that are our focus for the semester. Please keep in mind that these questions are a start, not an end, to our discussion. Students share a responsibility in ensuring that class time is used productively. You must prepare for class by reading the assignments and thinking about the issues and questions they raise before coming to class.

Work Product Requirements

Reading summary

Each student will produce a summary of at least two readings that compares/contrasts one reading with another. The summary will be at least 3 pages long.

Policy Memos

Two 3 to 5 page policy memos are required for this class. Each policy memo will discuss a policy program or organization from two out of the three case study areas covered in class: Crime and Criminal Justice Policy; Poverty and Social Welfare Policy; or, Cities and Urban Renewal Policy. Instructions for preparation of the memos will be distributed in class.

Oral Presentation and Final paper

The last three class sessions will be spent on student presentations. Each student will give an oral and written presentation of a policy memo of her or his choice. Instructions for this oral presentation will be given to students by the instructor. A final paper 10 page paper based on your oral presentation and policy paper will also be required.

Course Learning Objectives

At the end of the course you will be able to:

- Demonstrate a basic knowledge of the American public policy process, including the structure of political decision making, the role of institutional and organizational structure, and the impact of individual behavior.
- Discuss how the public policy process is shaped and contributes to an understanding of current policy issues.
- Analyze current policy challenges in with regard to political and institutional context and understanding.
- Apply theories of political behavior and structure to compare, distinguish and evaluate public policy.
- Synthesize reading materials and lecture notes to write two short policy memos, which will increase your discursive and critical thinking skills.
