Description:

This course uses some of the major analytical perspectives in comparative politics to understand the issue of persistent gender inequality in the advanced industrial states. We will consider why men still control more political and economic resources in these countries than women do. We will examine the ways in which labor markets, welfare state policies, and political institutions have a different impact on women than on men. We will look at measures that attempt to bring about greater gender equality in political representation and labor market participation and assess their effectiveness.

Through the lens of gender inequality, students will gain insight into a variety of issues of importance to comparative politics, including political representation and participation, political culture, political economy and varieties of capitalism, the historical development of welfare states, electoral systems and electoral quotas, supranational and international organizations, and the efficacy of social policy.

While the focus of the readings will be on the US and Western Europe, students are welcome focus in their own research papers on other geographic areas.

The course is taught as a seminar and limited in size to 20 students. Attendance at every class is required except in the case of an excused absence.

Learning objectives:

This course will use an analysis of the causes of persistent gender inequality in the polities and economies of the world’s affluent democracies to introduce students to a variety of areas of analysis within the field of Comparative Politics, including: political representation and participation; political culture; political economy and varieties of capitalism; the historical development of welfare states; electoral systems and electoral quotas; supranational and international organizations; and the efficacy of social policy.

Students who successfully complete this course will:

- Learn how to evaluate the merits and shortcomings of scholarly arguments about the sources of gender inequality;
- Learn to how to assess the quality of evidence and methods employed by authors in support of their theoretical claims;
- Identify key factors underlying persistent gender inequality in the advanced industrial democracies;
- Learn to apply the methods of research and inquiry of Political Science to the study of human behavior in political and economic life;
Learn to evaluate the usefulness of evidence for assessing any specific phenomenon and to question the nature of the evidence;
Demonstrate a critical understanding about the social forces that shape opportunity and power in society;
Demonstrate a critical understanding of the interplay between individual action and collective social life;
Gain exposure to the methodologies and findings of six areas within the field of Comparative Politics;
Apply the analytical constructs learned in the theoretical portion of the class to produce an original study on some aspect of gender inequality;
Present their findings formally for critique;
Gain improved writing and analytical skills through close work with the instructor on regular writing assignments.

Grading and Requirements

Class participation: 15%. I will be grading you on reasoned, informed, respectful, and useful contributions to the seminar discussions. Quality matters more than quantity. Effort and evidence that you did the reading carefully count for a lot.

Weekly Discussion Papers: 20%. During the course of the semester, you must hand in three short (approximately 3-4 double-spaced pages) summaries of the week’s readings. Please see the Weekly Discussion Papers Guidelines in Files on Canvas for more information on how to write and submit these papers. You may choose which weeks to write discussion papers.

Research paper: 40%. A paper on a topic of your choosing, subject to my approval, of about 15 pages in length. Please see the Research Paper Guidelines in the Files section on Canvas for more information on what to include in the paper proposals.

Paper Proposals: 5%

Paper Draft: 15%

Paper presentation: 5%

Course Readings

I have ordered one book at Book Culture: Torben Iverson and Frances Rosenbluth, Women, Work, and Politics (Yale University Press, 2010). We will read five out of the seven chapters of the book in the course of the semester. Please note that this book is also available as an e-book through CLIO. Additionally, there is one copy on reserve in the Barnard Library. Other course readings are either available on Canvas in Files (noted on syllabus) or online through CLIO.
I recommend that you consider purchasing the following book (if you do not already have it) to guide you in writing your research paper: Diana Hacker and Nancy Sommers, Rules for Writers, 7th edition (Bedford/St. Martin's, 2011).

NOTE: I strongly recommend reading each week’s readings in the order that they are listed on the syllabus. Some weeks the order doesn’t matter, but in some the readings build on one another sequentially as listed.

Introduction

Week One (9/4): Introduction to the Course

We will discuss the extent and nature of gender inequality in political and economic life and why it matters, and we will go over the structure and requirements of the course.

Liz Ford, “What is the millennium development goal on gender equality all about?’ The Guardian, March 26, 2015

Sophie McBain, “Gender inequality is costing the global economy trillions of dollars a year.” The New Statesman, February 12, 2014

Part I: Describing and Explaining Gender Inequality

Week Two (9/11): The Origins of Patriarchy

What explains why patriarchy characterizes relations between men and women for most of world history? How can we understand patriarchy’s origins and staying power? How do these four authors’ arguments differ? Do they have a common theme? (Note: The first two readings use game theory to make arguments about the origins of patriarchy. You may not understand all the diagrams and equations if you have not already studied the relevant methods – don’t worry about that. Concentrate on the authors’ arguments.)

Week Three (9/18): Discrimination vs. Lifestyle Preferences

Do women and men choose different paths in life? If so, why? Can we trace the different degrees of access that men and women (on average) have to political and economic power to either intrinsic preferences or discrimination born of gender schemas? [Note that if you are writing a discussion paper for this week you do not have to include the chapter by Ackerman.]

Virginia Valian, Why So Slow? The Advancement of Women (Cambridge, MA: The MIT Press, 1998), pp. 1-22 and 103-144 (chapters 1, 6, and 7) [Pdf of each chapter in Files on Canvas]

Erin Ackerman, “‘Analyze This’: Writing in the Social Sciences,” in Gerald Graff and Cathy Birkenstein, eds., They Say, I Say: The Moves that Matter in Academic Writing (New York: W. W. Norton and Company, 2010), pp. 175-192 [Pdf in Files on Canvas]

Week Four (9/25): Gender and Labor Markets

Preliminary paper proposals are due by midnight at the end of today. Please consult the Research Paper Handout for detailed instructions on how to write this proposal, which will be graded.

How does the structure of a labor market affect the likelihood of women’s workforce participation? What role does a country’s “variety of capitalism” play? What role does public policy play?

Mary Daly, “A Fine Balance: Women’s Labor Market Participation in International Comparison,” in Fritz W. Scharpf and Vivien A. Schmidt, eds., Welfare and Work in the Open
Week Five (10/2): The Gender Gap in Political Participation

Why do women participate less actively in politics than men do? Do the same factors explain women’s degree of political participation in all countries, or does context matter?

Week Six (10/9): The Gender Gap in Political Preferences

Extended paper proposals are due by midnight at the end of today. Please consult the Research Paper Handout for detailed instructions on how to write this proposal, which will be graded.

Do women and men have, on average, different political preferences? How can we explain this gender gap? Is it based on economic self-interest, attention to issues of specific concern to women, a biologically or socially induced compassion gap, or something else?

Torben Iversen and Frances Rosenbluth, Women, Work, and Politics: The Political Economy of Gender Inequality (New Haven: Yale University Press, 2010), pp. 110-130 (Chapter 5)

Week Seven (10/16): The Gender Gap in Political Representation

How does the structure of electoral institutions make the election of women to public office more or less likely? How does the structure of the economy affect the level of female political representation? Why does it matter if women are elected to office?

Week Eight (10/23): Public Policy’s Impact on Gendered Roles

What role does public policy play in shaping the gender division of labor in society? What are the consequences of that gender division of labor for political and economic equality between the sexes?

Gosta Esping-Andersen, Why We Need a New Welfare State (Oxford: Oxford University Press, 2002), pp. 68-95 (Chapter 3, “A New Gender Contract”) (Note that the author incorrectly uses the word “detrimental” in this book when what he really means is...
“critically important.” Do not let this confuse you unnecessarily!]) [Available as an e-book on CLIO.]

Week Nine (10/30): The Historical Origins of Differences in Work/Family Policy

If public policy has a profound and predictable influence on women’s rates of labor force participation and fertility, how do we explain differences in public policy across countries? What historical factors led welfare states to develop differently? How do welfare state institutions and policies contribute to shaping men’s and women's lives in different ways?

Part II: Solutions, Attempted and Proposed

Week Ten (11/13): Quotas for Women in Politics

DRAFT PAPERS ARE DUE AT MIDNIGHT TODAY. Please consult the Final Paper Guidelines for how this will be graded.

What political forces have supported the implementation of gender quotas? What are the benefits and costs of the different types of quotas? Do quotas have the potential to address women's under-representation in politics in a meaningful way? (Note: In writing your weekly discussion paper you do not need to address each individual contribution to the two “Gender Quotas” collections – just highlight some of the most interesting points made.)

“Gender Quotas I,” Politics & Gender Vol. 1, no. 4 (2005), 621-652

“Gender Quotas II,” Politics & Gender Vol. 2, no. 1 (2006), 101–128

Week Eleven (11/20): Mainstreaming Gender

Gender mainstreaming has taken hold internationally as the newest approach to addressing gender inequality in a wide variety of arenas. Does it have the potential to transform gender relations? How does gender mainstreaming compare to other approaches to promoting equality?

Mary Daly, “Gender Mainstreaming in Theory and Practice.” Social Politics vol. 12 no. 3 (2005): 433-450

Week Twelve (11/27): Toward Gender Equality in Parenthood and Employment

Much of the disparity between women and men in public life can be traced to the disparity in their roles in private life. Are there ways in which the family division of labor can be transformed so that political and economic inequality can be reduced or eliminated? Is there evidence that the electorate and politicians might be willing to move in that direction?

Janet C. Gornick and Marcia K. Meyers, eds., Gender Equality: Transforming Family Divisions of Labor (New York: Verso, 2009), Chapter 1 (Gornick and Meyers, pp. 3-66) and Chapter 19 (Gornick and Meyers, pp. 435-450). [Pdf in Files on Canvas]

Week Thirteen (12/4): Paper Presentations
FINAL PAPER IS DUE BY MIDNIGHT TODAY. Students will make presentations of their papers to the class. These presentations will be graded. Guidelines for the presentations will be provided in advance.
